

Sabancı University's graduate program in Ottoman and Modern Turkish History aims to foster fresh, unbiased, and critical visions of the Ottoman-Turkish past that are informed by the latest research. The program's separate MA and PhD tracks offer a holistic and integrated course of study that provides students from outside the field the chance to familiarize themselves with the discipline of history and recent scholarship and debates in Ottoman and Turkish Studies. The diverse specializations of our academic staff and the interdisciplinary makeup of the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences mean that students can pursue a course of study tailored to their own interests and goals even as they develop a firm and comprehensive grounding in the field.

WORK CLOSELY WITH TOP SCHOLARS

Since Sabancı University's History Program is graduate-only, our professors can dedicate their time to working with you, whether that's in the context of one of our ongoing research projects, academic advising, or your own research and coursework. Further, multiple active lecture series through the history program, faculty-led projects, faculty affiliates like Sabancı University's Digital Humanities Lab, and other schools at the School of Arts and Sciences brings students and scholars from different disciplines together to create a vibrant collaborative environment that extends well beyond the classroom.
